Evernote and Shoeboxed Make Your Paper Receipts and Business Cards Searchable and Accessible Any Time

Partnership Allows Users to Create Searchable Archives of Financial Documents and Personal Contacts Available on the Web, Desktop and Mobile Devices

DURHAM, NC and SUNNYVALE, Calif. – Evernote and Shoeboxed today announced a partnership to help people turn their piles of paper receipts and business cards into a searchable digital archive, accessible on multiple platforms including the Web, computers and mobile phones. Users can now export all of the receipt and business card scans from their Shoeboxed accounts directly into Evernote, where any printed text and handwritten scribbles become searchable and accessible from multiple platforms and devices.

Shoeboxed, the leader in online receipt management, scans paper receipts and business cards that users mail in and automatically organizes these documents so they can be used for taxes, bookkeeping, budgeting, insurance claims and expense reports. Evernote, a service designed to help individuals manage the enormous stream of digital and real-world content that clutters their lives, automatically receives scans from Shoeboxed and makes them accessible across all platforms. In addition, Evernote's text and image recognition technology allows users to search for handwritten notes and printed text in any receipt or card.

"With Evernote, people can stop worrying about what they'll want to remember a day, a month, or a year from now," said Phil Libin, CEO, Evernote. "By providing a seamless integration between our service and Shoeboxed, users will now have access to a robust archive of their personal, business, and financial lives that is easily searchable and available any time, from anywhere and on any device."

"Nobody wants to spend a Saturday scanning a pile of receipts and business cards," said Shoeboxed CEO and Founder Taylor Mingos. "With Shoeboxed, we do the scanning and let you send them in Evernote. Just imagine: You could have all your receipts and business cards accessible and searchable from anywhere."
