FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Shoeboxed.com now offers organization for offline receipts

BERLIN, Germany – Shoeboxed.com, a website that previously organized e-mail receipts exclusively, has launched a large addition to the site today that allows users to upload digital versions of all their paper receipts.

"We're very excited about this large improvement to our functionality," said Taylor Mingos, Shoeboxed's founder and CEO. "People finally have an easy and reliable way to organize all of their purchases."

An intuitive and easy-to-use applet now allows users to insert any image file of a receipt into their Shoeboxed account, and it will be organized with the rest of their purchases in a clear and tabular format.

To upload paper receipts, users can scan in or take digital pictures of their receipts. Uploaded receipts will appear alongside e-mail receipts in the My Receipts and Overview pages within the user's account.

The original functionality of the site—where e-mail receipts and e-mail notifications from online stores are automatically organized—will be unaffected by the new features. Shoeboxed also still offers a one-click unsubscribe feature that allows users to control the number of store notifications they receive in their personal e-mail accounts. The service is still completely free of charge.

Though this upgrade represents a significant step forward for Shoeboxed, Mingos made it clear that there are lots more additions planned for the near future. "We think we have the best product out there for organizing receipts, and we have lots of users who are in total agreement," Mingos said. "But we've got a really creative group of people on board here at Shoeboxed, and there are more really exciting new features coming to the site very soon."

The Shoeboxed team will be relocating back to Durham, North Carolina in the coming weeks.
